Success with Medical Record Requests

Success in responding to requests for medical records is dependent upon the provider’s preparedness and plans for handling the requests, and responding timely and appropriately. Follow these steps to ensure you are ready when a request for records is received.

Understand who the requests can come from. You may receive a request for medical records for a variety of reasons, and from various program contractors within Medicare. These may include: Comprehensive Error Rate Testing (CERT) Program, Medical Review Additional Development Request (MR ADR), Recovery Auditor (RA), Supplemental Medical Review Contractor (SMRC), or the Unified Program Integrity Contractor (UPIC).

Contact person – you may want to designate a single point of contact in your agency to coordinate requests for medical records. This ensures consistency in the process, and helps to minimize errors when responding.

Coordinate records – gather all documentation from all sources (labs, doctor’s offices, therapists, etc.) that supports the medical necessity for the services billed. If records are double-sided, copy both sides.

Expect that you will receive a medical record request. Have a plan to handle the requests, including a person who can review the documentation before sending it to ensure it’s complete.

Submit the documentation timely. Each request will identify the due date for receipt of the documentation. Send the documentation as soon as it is complete. Do not wait for the due date to send your documentation.

Send the records – review the request to determine how and where to send your documentation. Some requests can be sent via fax, while others must be sent in the mail. If mailing, ensure you send your documentation to the address indicated in the request.
